

THE FRONTIER POLICE.

When the Sheriff is Busy the Regular Army Boys Keep the Bad Men Quiet.

Daring Attempt of Road Agents to Rob a Paymaster Near Fort Laramie.

Four Months' Pay Secured Which was Never Recovered—The Killing of the Robbers.

The regular army is the police force of the frontier. In a population so scattered that a man isn't on speaking terms with more than four neighbors at any one time, it will not be supposed a sheriff or constable can get very far out of town. And when some marauder, who has no fear of the law before his eyes, breaks over the one inflexible rule and steals something, he must be pursued and caught and rigorously punished to keep others from following the scriptural injunction to "go and do likewise." Now and then a band of outlaws would drift into the region of Fort Laramie, where the writer was stationed in the honorable capacity of high private in a "doughboy" regiment some years ago, and attempt to run off stock or commit other depredations. If the invading party were small, or their advent occurred at a season of the year when time hung heavily on the settlers' hands, they would be pursued by the regularly constituted army of the law; for no territory so new, no country so large, but that officers could be found in abundance to assume the duties and draw the pay. But if bad judgment guided the counsel of the unruly, and they came on desperate deeds intent on serious depredations, the regular army would be turned to by settlers for protection. And partly because their duties demanded it, and chiefly because their wishes inclined to give poor soldiers exercise, the officers invariably rendered every assistance in their power.

As a rule soldiers are paid at the end of each month; but at frontier posts this is often difficult, and a pay day once in two months is considered good enough. When winter comes pay days are still more irregular. A paymaster may be snowed up in a comfortable four company fort, where the society is pleasant, the quarters agreeable and such inducements as cards and cognac are offered him. In such case he will not rush frantically into the storm and run the risk of being snowed out in some dreary mountain pass, but will exercise his intelligence and the unpaid soldiers' frugality at one time and in one place. The winter question had been a very severe one, and no paymaster had reached Fort Laramie since the holidays. As spring began her regular battle with a Wyoming winter we began to look for a paymaster. The long road to the south and the mountain pass to the north were both scanned from morning until night by a hundred men who began to think they could not live much longer without money. The snow had all melted away and the ground was in reasonably good shape for wheeling, when one morning the bugles sounded reveille and the boys turned out for the regulation breakfast of coffee and bread, the word went through the quarters like wildfire that a strange ambulance was standing out by the stables. A rush was made by the soldiers to gaze on this vehicle and to speculate as to whether or not it had conveyed the paymaster and our good money into camp. No one seemed to know where it came from, even the sergeant who had charge of the stable declining to talk, having too high a regard for his importance to dissipate it by revealing the only secret he possessed.

Little groups of soldiers fell to discussing the matter, and naturally fell to betting, the pools running about even in favor of and against the proposition that Eschold had arrived. But long before noon the matter was settled. It was not the paymaster; and winners of bets was just as badly off as before, for there was nothing with which to pay. The ambulance had been fitted up at Laramie, on the railroad, a town made famous by the bold and brilliant William Edgar Lee, and had been hauled to the fort to be ready for the paymaster when he arrived from Fort Fetterman, as his own vehicle, so the message man was badly disappointed. On reaching the same day the regular watchers on the outer walls discerned a group of dark objects on the mountain road, and promptly spread the news that the long expected "cash was coming." Up at the office the post commander took the captains studying the moving figures with a field glass, and knew they were anxious as we to greet their salaries.

Suddenly, as we watched first the group on the mountain road and then the group at the quarters, we were conscious of a commotion. The coming caravan seemed thrust in confusion. Little clouds of dust were tossed in the air—no, it was not dust, it was smoke! There was a fight! The officers were half wild with excitement. The glass, leveled it a moment, and then turned and issued an order. In a moment bugles blew and drums beat "assembly" with a swift, stirring force that betokened urgency, and "Fall in, Company D," was the order. The bugles and drums sounded "boots and saddles" for the cavalry when our orderly sergeant called quickly the names of twenty men in the company. We were ordered to get our arms at once; the others were ordered to remain at their quarters, and were to be ready to march at a moment's notice. We were armed with thirty cartridges, and the line of march was taken up with a quick walk toward the pass. As we hurried along, a regular line of sentries, two miles away, but could see no sign of life there. Whatever fate had befallen our paymaster, he and his assailants had dropped from sight, and there was nothing for it but a walk and a season of waiting, more or less patient. We had gone almost a quarter of a mile when a detail of cavalry dashed past and galloped for the hills, armed and accounted for a ten days' jaunt, if so much were necessary.

We saw them gain the summit of the pass at the swinging gallop, and then a signal flag told the watching officers at the fort. "Been a fight. Eschold wounded. Robbed. Send ambulance." The plodding infantrymen rode the signal, and really envied the cavalry boys, who seemed in a fair way to see some life. Arrived at the pass we found the ambulance overturned, a quantity of gold, silver and greenbacks scattered about on the ground, the horses gone and Major Eschold lying with a cushion under his head where the cavalrymen had left him. He had been shot in the shoulder and in the thigh. The ambulance from the fort reached him almost as soon as we did and brought the order to hurry to the river and prevent the escape of the robbers there.

Another walk of five miles and we were at the river. It seemed small hope, in a country so wide, that the hinder robbers so daring as these from selecting a more feasible course? But we had hardly reached the river's edge when we heard shots fired to the north, and instantly each man secreted himself, hiding his blue uniform in a gray mass of sage bushes and rocks. A moment afterward four men came galloping over a stony ridge to the left, two of them leading extra horses and all riding pell mell. They did not mean to cross the shallow water, but chose the level ground along its bank and dashed down stream. "Tention!" came in guarded tones from the sergeant in command. "Brown and Elliott take the first man, Graves and Gooding the second, Smith and Rogers the third, and I'll take the fourth. After we shoot, every man fire. Ready?"

The moments are intensely exciting now—four men plunging down toward us, each with a look of desperation on his face, each urging his horse to greater speed, yet watching the treacherous road. "Aim," said Sergeant Higgins. They were almost opposite us now, and less than two hundred yards away. Just when nearly to where the desperado lay, the hindmost man alone fell. The second and third horses were hit and showed it. The leader, a dashing fellow, equal to any surprise fate held for him, rose in his stirrups and hurled a curse of defiance at us, then struck his spurs again and again, and held his course undiminished. An irregular volley followed. The second man fell from his saddle; the third sprang to the ground and the fourth, upon foot, but was wounded and had to give up. The very demon of chance, though, seemed to have a special fate in store for the leader of the band. A hundred bullets whistled past him, but not one took effect. As he was about to bend in the river two hundred yards below, he turned in his saddle and raised a huge wallet, which he believed was filled with our good cash.

Two men were already half across the river, wading, swimming, struggling. They crept up the bank and tried to catch the reed horses, but could not. Long Bill Nolan started down the stream at a dead run. He found a knoll which gave him one last view of the fugitive, and he sent a volley of good Missouri lead after him at 600 yards. A second shot, and then a third, and Nolan fairly screamed with delight. "I've hit him," he called. Down both sides of the stream the soldiers hurried, and when nearly to the spot where the desperado lay, we heard another shot and wondered no bullet whistled near us. We thought he was fighting yet, and went forward with more care. Presently we saw him lying stark and dead on a shelving knoll. Nolan had hit him in the back, and the wound was probably fatal, but he who had captured thousands of dollars in cash almost at the gates of a four company post would take no chances on being made a prisoner, and he had ended his own life with a revolver.

Some moments afterward the cavalry, who had followed the game so closely they were obliged to double, came down to the water-side, and we gathered up the men and their belongings. The three men first brought down had nothing. The leader had a wallet which, when turned over to Major Eschold, was found to contain nothing but the pay-roll and a set of memorandum books. And that was all we ever recovered. Had the soldiers from the fort come out, and every foot of ground the robbers had ridden over was searched repeatedly with no results. Whether, finding these precious packages somewhere in the vicinity of the desperado's camp, and again secreted the treasure, against a day when they could more readily use it, no one ever knew. All that could be said with certainty was that four months' pay for 300 men was gone beyond recall, and we had to wait a month longer, till a fresh supply could be brought to us. The fatalities of the day were three robbers, one killed by the paymaster's own escort at the first attack and the others by the infantrymen. Two others were wounded and one captured, and this comprised their entire gang. Major Eschold and two of his escort were wounded, but they recovered, as did two men from the fort who were unfortunate enough to be hit.

Unsurpassed in the World.
The vestibuled trains of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul railway, running daily between St. Paul and Minneapolis and Milwaukee and Chicago, are the perfection of modern railway equipment, and are unsurpassed in the world. They consist of elegant day coaches, Pullman's latest and best sleeping cars and the finest dining cars in the country. These trains are lighted by electricity and heated by steam, and afford to the traveler every comfort and convenience to be had at the very best hotels. All classes of tickets are honored on these trains and the rates are no higher than by other lines. It is for this reason that discriminating travelers patronize this company and insist that their tickets read over its line, as they naturally want the best service for their money.

Herculean Strength.
Continually on the strain, or overtaxed at intervals, is far less desirable than ordinary vigor perpetuated by rational diet and exercise, and abstention from excess. Professional pugilists and athletes rarely attain old age. As ordinary vigor may be retained a wise regard for sanitary living, and for the protection against disease which timely and judicious use of medicine affords, so also it may be lost through prolonged sedentary labor, interrupted mental strain, and foolish eating and drinking, the chief and most immediate sequence of all four being dyspepsia. For this condition, then, or in any way induced, and for its offspring, dyspepsia of muscular and nerve power, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is the prime and most genial of remedies. Not only indigestion, but loss of flesh, appetite and sleep are remedied by it. Inexpert malarial and rheumatism are banished, and kidney, bowel and liver complaint removed by it.

What a Fortune.
Is a good healthy, peppy skin. Few are aware of the short time it takes for a disordered liver to cause blotches on the face, and a dark greasy skin. One bottle of BEGG'S BLOOD PURIFIER and BLOOD MAKER will restore this organ to its natural and healthy state, and cleanse the blood of all impurities. It is meeting with wonderful success. We guarantee every bottle. R. S. Hale & Co., Druggists.

The Verdict Unanimous.
W. D. Sult, druggist, Bippus, Ind., testifies: "I can recommend Electric Bitters as the very best remedy. Every bottle sold has given relief in every case. One man took six bottles and was cured of rheumatism, the 'grinding' standing." Abraham Hare, druggist, Belleville, Ohio, affirms: "The best selling medicine I have ever handled in my twenty years' experience, is Electric Bitters." The evidence of others, the glowing testimony, so that the verdict is unanimous that Electric Bitters do cure all diseases of the liver, kidneys or blood. Only half a dollar a bottle at R. S. Hale & Co.'s drug store.

Dyspepsia

Makes the lives of many people miserable causing distress after eating, sour stomach, sick headache, heartburn, loss of appetite, faint, "all gone" feeling, bad taste, coated tongue, and irregularity of the bowels. Dyspepsia does not get well of itself. It requires careful attention, and a remedy like Hood's Sarsaparilla, which acts gently, yet efficiently. It tones the stomach, regulates the digestion, creates a good appetite, banishes headache, and refreshes the mind.

Sick Headache.
I have been troubled with dyspepsia, I had but little appetite, and what I did eat did me no good. After eating I would have a faint or tired, all-gone feeling, as though I had not eaten anything. My trouble was aggravated by any business, painting. Last spring I took Hood's Sarsaparilla, which did me an immense amount of good. It gave me an appetite, and my food relished and satisfied the craving I had previously experienced." GEORGE A. PAGE, Watertown, Mass.
